Study Medicine On Two Continents

THE UNIVERSITY
OF QUEENSLAND
AUSTRALIA

Spend two years in Brisbane studying pre-clinical basic science at The University of Queensland, one of Australia's finest medical schools. Founded in 1936, The School of Medicine is renowned globally as an award-winning research institution of excellence and rigor. Accreditations for Australian medical schools are recognized by the U.S. government and Department of Education as exacting as those of the US accrediting bodies.

Students then spend two years in New Orleans at the Ochsner Medical Center, established in 1942, which has a nationally recognized forward-looking clinical delivery system, anticipating the medical needs of the future. Ochsner is highly regarded for the quality of its patient care and clinical services. Students will have the benefit of a well supervised and cohesive clinical experience. See information regarding accreditation below.

Practice Medicine in the U.S.

The United States faces a serious shortage of physicians. In response to that need, two world class academic medical institutions have joined to create a unique program for outstanding students leading to the practice of medicine in the United States.

Financial Aid is available to eligible students.

Graduates will be eligible for:

- ECFMG Certification
- USMLEs
- NRMP Match
- Practice of Medicine in the U.S.

This M.B.B.S. program (with 2 years of pre-clinical education at University of Queensland in Australia and 2 years of clinical instruction at Ochsner in Louisiana) (the "Program") is subject to approval by the Australian Medical Council (AMC). The University of Queensland has submitted to the AMC an application for accreditation of the Program. Until the AMC completes its review of the Program, Queensland will accept students eligible for the Program into Queensland's four-year M.B.B.S. program in Australia. In the event that the AMC does not timely accredit the Program, students who enroll will be expected to complete their four-year medical education at University of Queensland in Brisbane.
